Church Permit For Comic-Strip-Type Bible Serial Withdrawn On Protest Led By Jews Of Italy

Jews and Christians of Italy joined in condemning a version of the Bible in which a comic-book technique is used. With photographs and cartoon "balloons" for narration, a medium that has proved immensely popular with Italians, the mass-circulation series professedly aims at spreading knowledge of the Scripture.

The first installments of the Old Testament, serialized by a private publishing concern, says the New York Times, carried the imprimatur, or ecclesiastical printing permit, granted by the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Milan. However, a spokesman for the archdiocese said the permit would be withdrawn following representations from many churchmen and intervention by the Vatican.

Disavowal of the cartoon-technique Bible by Milan's ecclesiastical authorities came after the Jewish communities in Italy and their rabbis had officially expressed "amazement over and reproof for such grave profanation of the Book of Books."

The Jewish protest was signed by Prof. Elio Toaff, Chief Rabbi of Rome, and Dr. Sergio Piperno, president of the Union of Italian Israelitic Communities. It asserted that "no translation, no language can accurately and faithfully render the text of the Bible" and that the serialization in question was likely to "excite sensations and awaken instincts not always chaste and praiseworthy."

The statement deplored tampering with "the lofty monument of divine and human wisdom, the Book that educates the world in faith, in love of God and of all creatures, in goodness, in charity." The protest appealed to the Government to prevent the "continuation of such sacrilege, which offends God and men, not only believers but also those who admire the Bible as a great work of art."

Msgr. Enrico Galbiati, who as censor of the Milan Archdiocese is responsible for all printed matter authorized by it, said:

"I perfectly agree with the Jewish attitude. The comic-book edition of the Bible is plainly vulgar. Several Bishops have expressed their distaste and the Vatican has intervened. I have reported to the Cardinal (Giovanni Battista Cardinal Montini, Archbishop of Milan) on the affair and the imprimatur will not be granted for any following installments."

The ecclesiastical printing permit, conspicuously displayed on the frontispiece of the first three issues, says the New York Times, was signed by Msgr. Galbiati and Bishop Giuseppe Schiavini, Vicar General of the Archdiocese.

Msgr. Galbiati explained that the church authorities had seen only the text of the captions, not the illustrations. Under current practice of church censorship, the imprimatur attested merely that no errors had been found in the text, but did not mean approval of the publishing venture, the archdiocesan official said.

Gustavo Salatini, editor of the Biblical serialization, said: "Many priests have welcomed our publication, which is selling nearly 100,000 copies of every issue. We have asked for and obtained church approval. The rabbis should be glad that we popularize the Bible. We shall of course continue publishing our series."

A Jesuit, the Rev. Ernst Vogt, rector of the Pontifical Bible Institute in Rome and a leading Catholic authority on sacred Scripture, said that his institution had not been consulted on the matter and that he had not seen the series. "I should think this is a matter between the rabbis and the publisher," Father Vogt said.

La Bibbia (the Bible) appears in fortnightly issues of sixty-eight pages at 150 lire, the equivalent of about 24 cents. The photographs are being made in a Milan studio with professional actors and models. Seventy-five installments with about 20,000 pictures are planned.

The latest installment, the third, covers Genesis from Jacob's vision to Rachel's death (Chapters XXVIII to XXXV). In addition to the main characters, the cast includes "ten angels, eight figures, eighteen extras."

The captions are in modern, rather stilted Italian, floating above the characters' heads, says the New York Times. The comic-strip balloons containing the dialogue are called in Italy "fumetti" (little clouds of smoke). This term has come to denote the entire comic-book industry, the most profitable field of publishing in the country.

Union To Spend $1 Million Yearly To Push Dress Label

The International Ladies Garment Workers Union became the first union ever to sign a $1,000,000-a-year advertising contract. David Dubinsky, the union's president, announced the retention of Doyle Dane Bernbach, Inc., of 20 West Forty-third Street, New York, to promote consumer demand for the union label in every type of women's apparel from dresses to nightgowns.

The peppery leader of 450,000 cutters, pressers and seamstresses declared that the campaign would seek to establish the union label as "a moral trademark by which underworld elements could be driven out of the industry.

"This is a much-needed weapon to appeal to the conscience of retailers and consumers for support of the decent wages and working standards that have become a substitute for guerilla warfare in 9½ per cent of the garment industry," he added.

He said the union's convention, meeting in Miami Beach on May 11, would be urged to allocate at least $1,000,000 a year as a permanent budget for popularizing the label, reports the New York

Israel Begins Aqueduct From Jordan River To Push Dress Label

Israel began to lay an aqueduct that will transport water from the Jordan River to the Negev Desert. The first giant pipes, nine feet in diameter, were distributed along the fifty-mile route. The pipes will be laid at the rate of twelve and a half miles a year, according to Aharon Wiener, director of Water Planning for Israel, Ltd.

About 60 per cent of a twenty-five-mile canal that will connect the Jordan with the beginning of the aqueduct has been dug, says the New York Times. Preliminary work for a power station has been completed at the Sea of Galilee, which is to be used as a storage reservoir.

Tunnels through the hills are being bored. A network of seventy-inch pipes to distribute water in the eastern Negev is being laid. All phases of the project which is designed to transport 180,000 cubic feet of water a year, are scheduled to be completed simultaneously in 1964. Engineering plans had provided for completion by 1962, but the government did not budget enough money for this. The proposed allocation for 1959-60 is $13,000,000.

An application to the United States Government for economic assistance was submitted by the Foreign Ministry in January and is under consideration in Washington. The United States had offered to finance a regional plan to divide the Jordan River waters between Israel and her Arab neighbors, but this project was thwarted by Arab objections.

Mr. Wiener said Israel's slender water reserves were being taxed by the unexpectedly heavy immigration from Eastern Europe. He said water that had been earmarked for agricultural expansion would have to be diverted to towns to meet increased domestic and industrial needs. The farming expansion program will thus have to be cut back and imports of bread grains and fodder increased, he stated.

An unanswered question in Israel is where the Jordan River will be tapped. The river north of the Sea of Galilee flows for five miles through an area that was demilitarized under the Syrian-Israeli armistice agreement of 1949. The Israelis built a diversion canal at a point within the demilitarized zone, but Syria objected, says the New York Times. Alternative withdrawal points north and south of the demilitarized areas are being considered.

Couple Gave $10 Million For Free Dental Clinic Which Treats 1,000 Youngsters Daily

Mrs. Leonie Guggenheim, aged ninety-three years, philanthropist, supporter of opera and popular music, and wife of the late Murry Guggenheim, died in New York at her home, 998 Fifth Avenue, after a long illness. A private funeral service was held at her home.

Mrs. Guggenheim was the daughter of Jacques Bernheim, of Mulhouse, Alsace, France. She was married in 1887 to Mr. Guggenheim, who was one of seven sons of the late Meyer Guggenheim, founder of the copper fortune.

Mrs. Guggenheim joined her daughter of Jacques Bernheim, many of his charities, says the New York Herald Tribune. An accomplished pianist, Mrs. Guggenheim had a great interest in music, and from 1924 through 1930, she and her husband joined Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Guggenheim in sponsoring the free Goldman band concerts in Central Park and on the New York University Campus in the Bronx. The late David Guggenheim was Murry Guggenheim's brother.

She and her husband established the Murry and Leonie Guggenheim Foundation in 1929. Their purpose was to provide free dental care to needy children of greater New York City. The office of the Foundation is at 161 E. 42 Street.

The first grant was for construction of a free dental clinic. The total grants to date are in excess of $16,000,000, of which more than $1,600,000 represent the cost of land, buildings, and equipment for the clinic, known as the Murry and Leonie Guggenheim Dental Clinic at 339 E. 25th Street. It is operated in close cooperation with public and parochial schools and day nurseries. During days when schools are in session, an average of 1,000 children a day are treated at the clinic.

During the years 1955, 1956 and 1957, says the New York Herald Tribune, Mr. Guggenheim contributed a total of $373,000 for the modernization of the Mount Sinai Hospital School of Nursing, which was renamed the Murry and Leonie Guggenheim Hall in 1957 in honor of its two principal benefactors, who donated liberally to the school in 1927.

Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Lucille G. Cummerer; a son, Edmond A. Guggenheim; two granddaughters, Mrs. Natalie Talbert and Mrs. Jean Leopold; and four great-grandchildren. Mrs. Guggenheim was a member of Temple Emanuel-El. She was buried in Salem Fields Cemetery, Cypress Hills, Brooklyn, in the Guggenheim mausoleum.

Israel Bond Meeting Starts $300 Million Issue

The heads of Israel's government made strong appeals at the Florida Israel Bond Meeting to American Jews to provide the economic resources to enable Israel to absorb the heavy influx of immigrants from Europe.

In a cabled message to 1,800 American Jewish leaders, Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion asserted that Israel's main task was the implementation of a long-range program of economic development "necessary to receive hundreds of thousands of immigrants."

The development of such a program, Mr. Ben-Gurion said, is the "joint responsibility" of American Jews and Israelis, says the New York Times. It has been estimated that 100,000 Jews from behind the Iron Curtain will arrive in Israel this year.

Mr. Ben-Gurion's message was reinforced by a similar plea from Levi Eshkol, Israel's Finance Minister. Israel's needs were also cited by other speakers at the national inaugural conference of the Israel Bond Organization at the Fontainebleau Hotel, in Miami Beach. The meeting will start a $300,000,000 bond issue. Mr. Eshkol referred to the "torrent of newcomers" in asserting that "we cannot cope with this situation without the extraordinary participation of your communities."

To help meet the need for immigrants' housing, the national women's division of the Israel Bond Organization adopted plans for a campaign to provide Israel bond funds to build 7,500 housing units for immigrants this year. At a cost of $3,000 a unit, this represents a nation-wide goal of $22,500,000 in Israel bond sales for the division.

Abraham Feinberg, president of the organization, outlined the economic advances that have been achieved in Israeli since 1951 with the aid of Israel bond funds. Since the floating in 1951 of the Israel first bond issue, $365,000,000 has been raised.

Mr. Feinberg said that Israel's agricultural production had risen from $90,000,000 to $350,000,000 annually. Industrial production, he said, has risen from $400,000,000 to $900,000,000 a year, while industrial employment has increased from 100,000 to 140,000.

Mr. Feinberg said that the potash production at the Dead Sea was now 85,000 tons a year, says the New York Times. The phosphate mines, which were not discovered until after Israel was established as a nation, are producing 250,000 tons a year, Mr. Feinberg reported.

Problems Of Jewish Art

BY DR. HELEN ROSEMAN, LECTURER IN THE HISTORY OF ART, UNIVERSITY OF MANCHESTER

The problem of Jewish art is intimately connected with the facts of Jewish existence. Art is a form of expression and communication and the Jews have used this medium from the Biblical to the contemporary period in varying degrees and circumstances. In spite of the prohibitions of the Old Testament, pictorial representations existed in Biblical times and are frequently specifically allowed in the Talmud, the original prohibition being aimed at idolatry, rather than art, an attitude similarly found for example in the Byzantine movements of iconoclasm and in Puritanism.

Jewish art as an expression of Judaism was not created in a vacuum, and therefore the question of the assimilation of foreign, especially Hellenistic, models is posed from the outset. A different problem entirely is raised by Israeli art, which still appears very largely European, but it is to be expected that a national art will arise in that country in the future, an Israeli art which may well include, but will not confine, the development of Jewish art in a religious setting.

In the period of Greco-Roman assimilation, Philo, as is well known, was the exponent of synthesis between the Jewish religion and pagan thought. It is in this period also that Jewish art in a religious sense developed, although its remains are scanty. The decoration of Palestinian synagogues, especially in the 6th century C.E., shows an adaptation of mainly liturgical themes in a highly conventionalised and abstract style, whilst the Jewish catacombs of the late Roman period include, with representations of the Torah shrine and other ritual objects, a great number of originally pagan symbols which may, however, have been re-interpreted from a Jewish religious point of view.

For those who sought Jewish prototypes for the decoration of Early Christian sarcophagi, the 3rd century synagogue of Dura-Europos with its frescoes, now transported to Yale University, came as a revelation, because these paintings give full, although only partly explained, Biblical cycles including, among other scenes, the Finding of Moses, the Exodus, the stories of Elijah, Esther, and many others. The names found on some of these frescoes make it clear that the artists were Jews. In this light it is likely that the Exodus sarcophagi in the museums of Arles and Aix, as well as the Jonah sarcophagus recently acquired by the British Museum, are either of Jewish origin or were commissioned by Jews.

In Hammam-Lif an ornate mosaic floor, now in the Brooklyn Museum, has been found, and it is worth noting that the ground plans of the Dura and Hammam-Lif synagogues are both rectangles, their entrances and apses for the shrine being on the long sides, whilst in the Palestinian synagogues the more usual arrangement obtains: the entrances and the shrines are on the short sides of the building. This discrepancy gives a hint as to the variety of structures in that period, of which the synagogue of Alexandria, the home of Philo, was the most famous.

The Greco-Roman tradition continued in the Middle Ages and the sumptuous manuscripts, among which the Spanish Haggadot are outstanding, show representations of Biblical scenes and the ritual of the Seder. Again, it is likely, in many cases, that the illuminators were Jews, since the iconography reveals a detailed knowledge of Jewish legends and traditions and the relationship between the Hebrew script and the pictures is frequently so intimate as to suggest a common scriptorium.

In architecture the situation is similar, although in most European centres the Jews were debarred from joining masons' guilds and were, therefore, restricted to the position of patrons rather than executants. This latter development is of considerable importance, since the patronage of the arts is a significant element in their evolution and, throughout history, art and patronage are vitally dependent on one another.

In Eastern Europe, especially Poland, the medieval tradition stayed alive in mural paintings, and the work of Jewish gold and silversmiths developed in a creative manner, whilst a centralised type of synagogue structure, adapted to timber work, was ultimately derived from prototypes of the Italian Renaissance. With the Sephardi Jews in the West, the emphasis is on enlightened patronage, the big commissions going largely to Christian artists or to Jewish craftsmen working in their style.

With the progress of political emancipation and nationalism the Jewish artist seems to explore Jewish subject matter from an almost folkloristic point of view. The intimate relationship to the religious theme is severed, and Jews appear as European figures, with formal problems and nationalist ideals, European or, more recently, Israeli influences frequently taking the place of religious valuations.

There is no reason, however, why consciousness of the religious values of Judaism should not lead to a revival of Jewish art. To give a few examples: Jacob Epstein, one of the greatest of contemporary sculptors, has as yet received no commissions from Jewish religious bodies, whilst the Christian church has appreciated his interpretation of Old and New Testament themes. One could think of Chagall's paintings reaching a wider public if they could be incorporated in the decoration of synagogal precincts, since there can be no doubt as to the Jewish element in his pictorial inspiration, based as it is on Judaeo-Polish folk art of the 17th and 18th centuries.

In other cases it is more difficult to disentangle the Jewish element: it is doubtful, for instance, how far Liebermann may be regarded as a Jewish painter, since his Jewishness was rather more apparent to the Germans than to the Jews. But it may be suggested that his highly intellectual and melancholy approach to portraiture shows an affinity to a tradition persisting from the days of the Talmud, and stimulating the mind in the direction of dialectic questioning.

"The Shtetl" Is A New Exhibit At The Yivo In N.Y.

Of late the Shtetl (small town) has become a frequent topic of discourse in intelligent Jewish homes. The last of the immigrant generation attempt to transmit to their children and children's children something of the spirit of the shtetl that is no longer. The young generation is receptive, manifests a sensitivity to the values of the shtetl and an eagerness for a more intimate acquaintance with its life. Unfortunately, the media of such acquaintance for the young generation are very limited. The appeal of the shtetl is multiform: sentimental, emotional, intellectual. To capture and to convey this appeal in a minimum of time no medium is more suitable than that of pictorial representation. Better is the seeing of the eyes than the wandering of the desire, says the old sage Koheleth.

In consonance with this time-tested advice, the Yivo Institute for Jewish Research, in New York has opened a new channel of acquaintance with the shtetl. In its current exhibition, The Shtetl, 781 photographs and other documents, representing 381 localities, graphically portray Jewish life in Eastern Europe. This rich illustrative material is divided into 17 divisions, such as Jews at work and play, religious life, education, philanthropy, cultural institutions, quaint characters and occupations, and the like. The exhibition also brings to expression the effects of modernism on the shtetl. Several divisions are devoted to showing the shtetl in transition. In the period under consideration, large-scale emigration was rapidly changing the physiognomy and character of the shtetl. One division of the exhibition shows the shtetl in its peregrinations.

Those, whose memories of childhood and youth go back to the shtetl will certainly want to see the exhibition if for no other reason than to bring back the magic and the glow of those distant days. Those who have never known the shtetl as a reality have a real surprise in store for them in visiting the exhibition. A new world will open to them, quaint, mysterious, and withal fascinating. They will come face to face with the strange beauty, the intimate warmth, and the age-old understanding and sympathy of the shtetl. There were castles in Eastern Europe, castles of the Jewish spirit. Visit them.

The exhibition is open on work days at the building of the Yivo Institute for Jewish Research, 1048 Fifth Avenue, New York (entrance on 86th Street) from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.; on Saturday, from 6 p.m. to 9:30 p.m.; on Sunday, from 2 p.m. to 9:30 p.m.

The Magician From Jerusalem Who Teaches Adults Hebrew

BY EDITH ARONSKY

In scores of communities across the land, Americans are rubbing their eyes in astonishment at the magic wrought upon them by an exuberant Israeli language teacher, Dr. Mordecai Kamrat. After even the briefest exposure to his buoyant personality and teaching methods, they are likely to repeat the estimate first voiced by awed observers in Israel: "In the Middle Ages he would have been burned for practicing witchcraft!" Dr. Kamrat's "witchcraft" is a heady blend of talent, scholarship, experience, verve and humor, which he uses to teach Hebrew to adults. As the founder of the phenomenally successful Ulpan system in Israel, and as an internationally recognized linguistics authority, he has come here to exercise his legerdemain in academic and Jewish circles.

His presence in the United States coincides with an increasingly noticeable upsurge of interest in Hebrew among adults. According to the latest figures compiled by Dr. Abraham I. Katsh, chairman of New York University's Department of Hebrew Culture and Language, in 1955 some 245 American institutions of higher learning were offering Hebrew courses, in contrast with 1917 when only 56 offered the language, and then solely as a classical tongue. Of these 245, 48 teach Hebrew as a modern language and significantly they have attracted nearly half of the 14,000 Hebrew course enrollees. By way of comparison, enrolment for Hebrew language courses on the college level in 1950 was 7,000.

On the high school level, Dr. Judah Lapson of the Hebrew Culture Service Committee estimates that about 6,000 teen-agers are currently studying Hebrew in the public high schools of the nation, and another 1,000 are acquiring it in parochial high schools. The teaching of Hebrew in public high schools began in Brooklyn in 1930. Today the language is offered in 85 public secondary schools in 16 cities.

Statistics in a third general area — community centers, congregations and Jewish organizations — are impossible to obtain, but in recent years there has been a proliferation of small clusters of men and women studying Hebrew as part of synagogue adult education classes or through programs sponsored by national agencies. The number of adult Jews who would like to study Hebrew, were facilities available, cannot be estimated. Dr. Samuel M. Blumenfield, director of the Jewish Agency's Department of Education and Culture where Dr. Kamrat is now serving as visiting consultant, has said: "We know that there is a large, untapped reservoir not only of youngsters but of adults of all age groups who desire to gain a working knowledge of Hebrew."

Into this tide of mounting interest, 44-year-old Dr. Kamrat has plunged with zest, energy and a lifetime of training. A graduate of Cracow University, Poland, he went on to Western European universities for advanced work in education and psychology, and studied under the great Danish linguistics expert, Otto Jesperson. Migrating to Palestine in 1936, he immersed himself in problems of adult education and teacher training for that field. As consultant on adult education for the Israel Ministry of Education, he has devised numerous programs for various agencies and institutions, including the Israel Armed Forces.

What turned out to be Dr. Kamrat's most far-reaching contribution — the Ulpan system — was launched experimentally in Jerusalem in 1949 as a means of integrating the thousands of newcomers into the life of the new state. So successful was this venture that today Israel has about 40 Ulpanim spread around the country. The number of men and women of all ages, backgrounds and countries who have passed through the Ulpanim is conservatively estimated at 100,000 — and this does not include visiting officials, scholars, Christian clergymen, students and tourists.

What is an Ulpan? The term is frequently misused as a kind of generic label for practically any Hebrew course. The authentic Ulpan, however, is a far cry from a haphazard set of language lessons. In Israel the hallmarks are: intensive teaching of basic Hebrew at seminars, acculturation programs geared to the real-life needs of the students, an organized curriculum of study and planned activities (such as group outings, tours, parties, lectures) supervised by teachers who work together to speed the learning process. Students have the choice of three types of Ulpanim: (1) the "residential" variety, where for five months groups study Hebrew 30 hours a week and live "Hebrew" for the balance of the time; (2) the "kibbutz" Ulpan, where students work a half day and study a half day; and (3) the "external" Ulpan, centers where Israelis study the language in off-work hours.

Here since last June on a leave of absence from the Education Ministry, Dr. Kamrat has embarked on a vigorous "missioning" program for new ways of teaching Hebrew and other languages, based upon the Ulpan experience. In the course of his work, he has had to explode myths and combat prejudices. Americans in general, he observes, have a defeatist attitude on foreign languages.

"With the proper teaching methods, the application of scientific techniques, and the creation of an atmosphere of interest, he contends, "you can learn anything, not only a language. The methods we use to teach Hebrew can be applied to other living languages. The important thing about learning a language is that it must be a living experience, not something you try to get from reading a book. I ask my students, 'How did you learn to dance? By studying a book? No, you got up and tried one step, then another, and see, you were dancing!' That's a living experience."

Dr. Kamrat denies that Hebrew is a "difficult" language and asserts that anyone, regardless of age, can acquire it. The argument, "I'm too old to learn," elicits from him the quick rebuttal that thousands of men and women in their 60's and 70's have successfully learned — and thereby gained a new lease on life. As a matter of fact, the educator has been using this theme to stimulate the desire to study.

"In Israel," he reports, "the motivation to learn is by no means limited to a bread-and-butter necessity. There are other motivations — love for the country and the Jewish tradition; and deeper than these, the element of hope. Adults of all ages come to us to build a new life. Acquiring Hebrew demonstrates that they still have the capacity to learn and to grow. In America, people are delighted when they discover they can still learn. Quite apart from the reasons that may originally have attracted them to the language, the most powerful of drives operates in all of them: proving to themselves and to the world that they can 'get it.'" Strong determination alone, however, he cautions, is not enough: a weak teacher can quickly vitiate even the most powerful of motivations.

As for the "difficulties" of Hebrew, Dr. Kamrat feels that faulty pedagogy has built up unnecessary roadblocks. He is critical of that school of teaching which introduces grammar to beginner students before they have a feeling for the tongue. "Dikduk, grammar, isn't Hebrew," he scoffs. "We're not raising a generation of grammarians. At the beginning, content is the main thing, not mechanics; use as opposed to rules." He is equally critical of that school of teaching which at the all-important opening classes places undue stress upon low-frequency words or unusable phrases, such as "This is a table, that is a chair." "What are we?" he asks. "Carpenters?"

The Israeli educator has opened two pilot Ulpanim in New York City, and others in Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Detroit, Atlanta, and Richmond, Va. National organizations — among them, the American Board of Governors of the Hebrew University and a group of Bnai Brith leaders in Metropolitan New York — have called upon him for special teaching programs. A Hebrew course will be offered to other Bnai Brith leaders next summer. As an aftermath of Dr. Kamrat's participation in the programs of the last Hadassah and ZOA conventions, both agencies have plans for courses.

"When I first came to America," Dr. Kamrat declares, "I thought the problem would be to find students. In opening the pilot Ulpanim in New York, I was told that it would be extremely difficult to get busy adults to sign up for 12 hours of study a week for three months. We could accommodate 100; 250 applied. The problem isn't students — it's teachers. There are simply not enough trained teachers to go round."

To add to the effectiveness of the available teaching force, Dr. Kamrat is conducting two permanent seminars, one for Hebrew day school teachers and directors in New York, in cooperation with the Jewish Education Committee; the second for Hebrew teachers in New York City high schools. A third training course for summer instructors at the Hebrew-speaking Ramah Camps will open soon. Last summer, Dr. Kamrat spent a month at Cornell University conducting a "little Ulpan" for Hebrew teachers from all parts of the U.S. and Canada, a program conducted jointly by the Jewish Agency and the American Association for Jewish Education. Next summer, he will extend his leave of absence to repeat the course.

Sandwiched between these activities is a heavy schedule of lectures, seminars, conventions and flying visits around the country to non-Jewish as well as to Jewish audiences. After hearing him deliver one lecture, a group of New York teachers petitioned the Israel Consulate for a special course tailored for their needs. As a result, Dr. Kamrat is now giving an inservice training series of 15 sessions to teachers of the New York school system on "Israel's Experience in Education and Language and its Application to the American Scene."

One subject that will probably be raised will be ways of teaching English to Puerto Rican children in the city's public schools. He has been lecturing extensively at such institutions as the Foreign Language Department of the University of Maryland. Not long ago he was invited to Washington to address Latin American educators on their teaching problems.

The methods which Dr. Kamrat uses to teach Hebrew bear ponderous pedagogical titles, such as "subject-centered instruction," "the exploitation of unconscious elements," "training the auditory memory," "the teaching of reading as a process of recognizing symbols" — all of which have little meaning for, but very potent effect upon, lay students. I watched him in action one night at the course for Bnai Brith leaders.

The scene was a small conference room at the Herzl Institute in New York. The students, 16 in all, including several married couples who appeared to be parents and grandparents, sat around a large table, pencils and notebooks in hand, at their eighth lesson. The atmosphere crackled with excitement. From the frequent outbursts of laughter and spontaneous applause, it was obvious that the students hadn't had so much fun in school since their days in the kindergarten.

The major part of the two-hour session was devoted to misparim, numbers, from zero to 10, a terra incognita for the beginners. Before introducing each new number, Dr. Kamrat carefully explained the "spirit" behind the word, writing on the blackboard as he talked and presenting various cognate words drawn from the students' own experience and interests. Thus, shava, seven, based upon the three-letter Hebrew root shin, bet, ayin, could be manipulated, he demonstrated, to mean "satisfied, satiated, full," and the implication of "blessing."

The Biblical names Beersheva, "well of satisfaction," or "well of the oath"; Elisheva (whence

DEATHS

Mrs. Joseph B. Salsberg (nee Dora Wilensky), 171 Madison Avenue, died on Friday, March 20, at Princess Margaret—Hospital, at the age of fifty-six years; after an illness of several months. She was the executive director of the Jewish Family and Child Service. She is survived by her husband, Joseph B. Salsberg, a former M.P.P. (Labor Progressive) for Toronto-St. Andrew riding; two sisters: Mrs. I. Goldberg (Jenny), of New York; and Mrs. Leo Liederman (Faygel), of San Francisco, Calif.; two nieces: Susan Goldberg and Lori Liederman; and two nephews: David Goldberg; and John Peter Liederman. Rabbi Abraham L. Feinberg officiated at funeral services at Holy Blossom Temple. Interment was at Bathurst Lawn Cemetery. Shiva was at the home. Mrs. Dora Wilensky Salsberg was one of Canada's outstanding social workers in the field of family service and child welfare. She had been director of the Jewish Family and Child Service of Toronto since 1929; and was a former member of the National Board of Canadian Association of Social Workers. She was active on the Social Planning Council of Toronto and its predecessor organization, the Welfare Council of Toronto; and was on the board of governors of the Canadian Welfare Council, as well as many of its committees. For outstanding public service, Mrs. Salsberg was awarded both King George V and Coronation medals. Mrs. Salsberg, one of the early professionally trained social workers in the city, was a pioneer in the development of professional standards of social workers. Her outstanding contribution was in setting these standards, which meant educating the public, and stressing the fact that just giving directly to people did not mean helping, but that what was needed was professional guidance by trained personnel and a flexible program to meet the needs of each applicant. She and other directors made representation to officials and ministers of the Crown and have left their imprint on social legislation. Mrs. Dora Wilensky Salsberg grew up in Toronto; graduated from high school with the highest marks in the province of Ontario; and entered MacMaster University, Toronto, where she graduated as a gold medalist in modern history. After graduating she worked with the Federation of Jewish Philanthropy, of Toronto, which later divided to become Jewish Welfare Fund and Jewish Family and Child Service. She then went to study at the New York School of Social Work, later worked in Chicago, Ill., and then returned to Toronto. Friends, people from agencies, and others in her field are organizing to raise a Dora Wilensky Scholarship Fund.

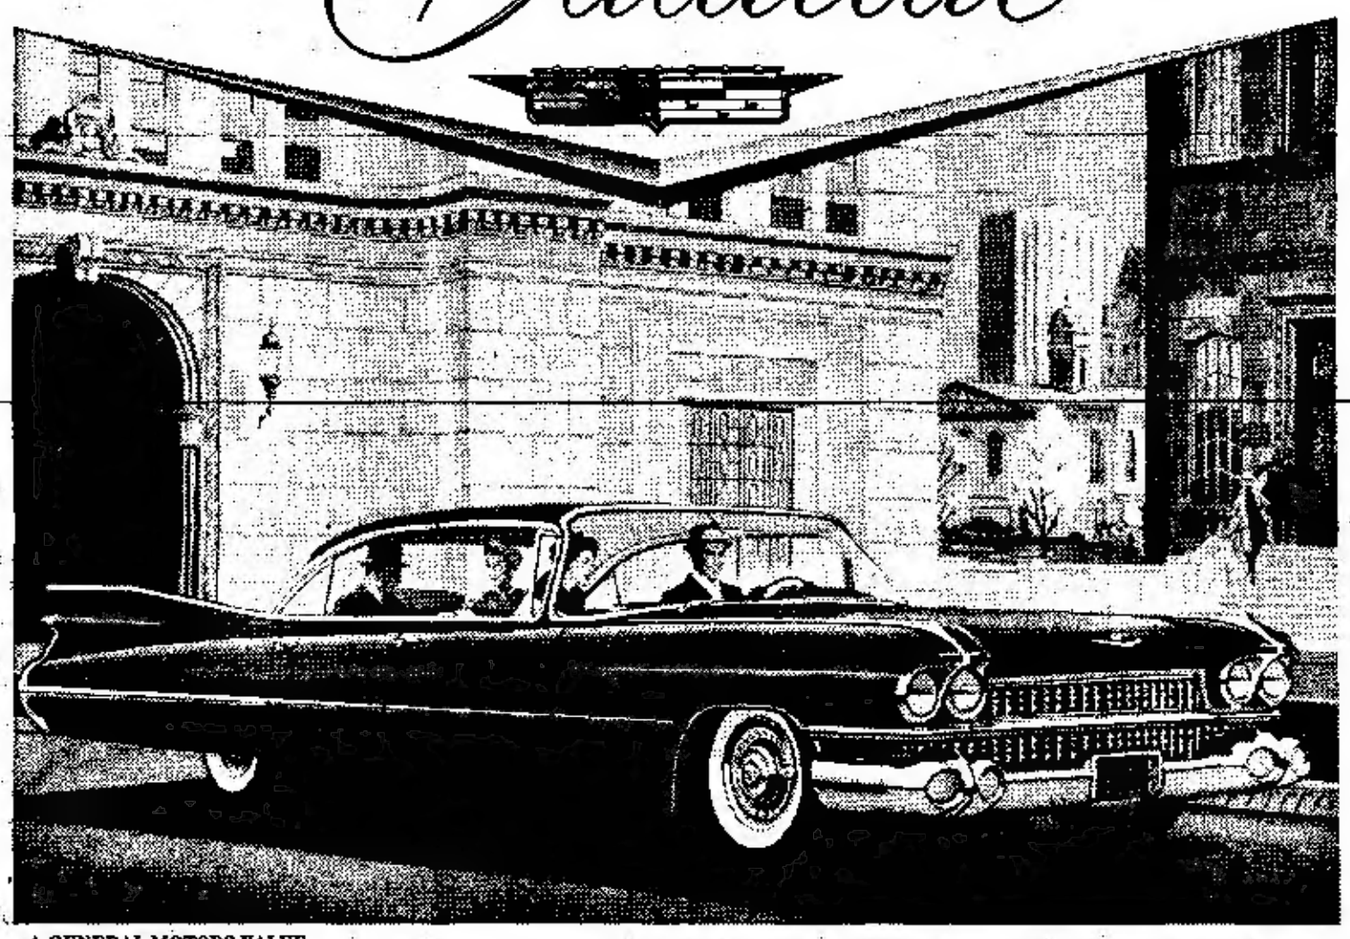
Cadillac



A GENERAL MOTORS VALUE

Without Precedent...Even Among Cadillacs!

This newest "car of cars" is without precedent—even among Cadillacs.

Cadillac's majestic new styling is the subject of unstinted admiration. Cadillac's new fabrics and leathers are breathtaking to behold and its interiors are so spacious that entering and leaving are accomplished with wonderful ease and grace. And the car is so easy to handle, so obedient and responsive to the touch and so smooth and silken in action that even the longest journey is a pleasure to anticipate—and a joy to recall ... true motoring perfection.

Without precedent, did we say?

There are some ways in which this new Cadillac is very much like its distinguished predecessors ... the great quality of its craftsmanship, for instance ... its remarkable dependability ... and its extraordinary economy of ownership.

But with these happy exceptions, Cadillac for 1959 is clearly in a class all of its own!

comes the English Elizabeth), meaning "My God is satisfaction"; Batsheva, "daughter of satisfaction"; shavuah or "week"; and shiva, the seven days of mourning — all these words and more Dr. Kamrat wrote quickly in teaching just one number. Similarly with shmoneh, 8, he connected the root with shamen, oil or fat, and esser, 10, with riches.

Booming out the numbers, he called for frequent repetitions. He wrote Hebrew roots on the board, deftly erased a letter here, added one there, and snapped his fingers urging identification like a military drillmaster. He played a variety of games with the digits — acting out the meaning of a number and prompting quick responses, reciting random figures — 3, 8, 7, 2 — at machine-gun pace and demanding Hebrew equivalents, deliberately changing the subject and returning abruptly: "How much is arbaA and sheshA? "Say 10, 9, 8, 7" and "Quick, what is your phone number?"

Turning to the small textbook, 500 Milim, to a lesson on sicha, conversation, Dr. Kamrat asked each student to read a sentence, going clockwise around the table. The question of the lesson, "Where do you live?" was answered by each student in turn, amid much laughter. Dr. Kamrat then read the lesson, pausing dramatically every few words to feign ignorance: "I can't read the next word. Tell me what it is." When he had completed the reading, he instructed the class, "Now shut the books and we will have a little sicha." Around the table each student tried a simple conversational gambit in Hebrew, with much stumbling and groaning. Dr. Kamrat beamed. "You see, this is only your eighth lesson, and already you are speaking Hebrew!" The class broke into loud applause.

In the final few minutes, Dr. Kamrat announced that he was going to make a speech b'ivrit — in Hebrew. In contrast with his style in the earlier part of the lesson — when he had used every part of his body, gestures, finger snapping, foot stomping, facial expressions and alternating voice tones to hammer home his points — the speech was delivered slowly, clearly and quietly. It concerned the newcomers to Israel and what they found there — ganim, gardens, harim, mountains, and the class nodded at each familiar word — and the brotherhood of Jews. When he had finished, the students called out in a mixture of surprise and self-congratulation, "We understood every word!"

The fervor generated in this one class is typical of Ulpan everywhere. Letters from teachers, students, would-be students, rabbis, educators, and synagogue officials are studded with phrases like "inspiring," "delightful," "I want to study right now," and — from the president of a midwest synagogue — "My phone hasn't stopped ringing with calls of commendation and gratification since you spoke here." Comments Dr. Kamrat with a sigh, "If I could divide myself into a dozen parts, we could have Ulpanim in hundreds of places."

The aim of the American-style Ulpanim — all of which entail 12 hours of study per week over three months — is to develop the ability to read, write and speak with a limited vocabulary of active words. Dr. Kamrat recognizes that in going about the country, he can give students little more than what he calls "appetizers" — that is, enough of a taste for Hebrew to whet the appetite to learn. "The size of the vocabulary isn't quite so important with adult beginners as their conviction that they can acquire the language. We must avoid early frustrations which destroy self-confidence and discourage them from continuing their studies. The principal goal at the beginning is to make them know they can get it."

Of the many questions posed by laymen, one of the most frequent perhaps is that usually asked by women: "Don't you think that my child is too young and that I'm too old to learn?" It is a tribute to Dr. Kamrat's magic that the query arises only before his lectures. Once his spell takes hold, the question vanishes into air and is replaced by another, more insistent and urgent. "When," they ask, "can we begin?"

● BAR-ILAN UNIVERSITY ●

The faculty housing development, at Bar-Ilan University, the university in Israel founded by American and Canadian Jews, to be known as Sh'chunat Mordechai, is dedicated to Maurice Pollack, Quebec industrialist, and leader in the $200,000 drive of the Canadian Friends of Bar-Ilan University for the project. Mr. Pollack contributed the first $25,000, to build two homes, at a dinner in Montreal. Rabbi Joseph H. Lookstein, leader of Congregation Kehilath Jeshurun, in New York, was the speaker. The expansion of the faculty to keep pace with the growth of the student body has been hampered by the housing situation in Ramat Gan and nearby Tel Aviv. In the less than four years since the college opened the student body was increased fourfold to its present 346. Mr. Pollack, who together with Rabbi S. N. Zambrowsky, member of the University's board of trustees, and the late Dr. Pinkhos Churgin, founder and first president, conceived the "faculty row" project, is now in Israel completing preliminary arrangements. The 32 apartments will be reserved for permanent members of the faculty of the religiously-oriented university. A private liberal arts college offering Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science degrees upon completion of a four-year curriculum patterned along American and Canadian academic lines, Bar-Ilan University will hold its first commencement later this year. It is sponsored and maintained by the American Committee for Bar-Ilan University, 527 Madison Avenue, New York 22. A majority of the students receive tuition and maintenance scholarships.

Assisting Migration, Weapon Of Jewish Survival

The "JIAS News" says: The Jewish Immigrant Aid Services of Canada (Jias) is now celebrating its fortieth year of existence. The organization which was born in the wake of World War I, when the need for a special immigration and immigrant aid programme to take care of post-war immigration and the resettlement of new arrivals became apparent, now enters its fifth decade of dedicated service to the Jewish immigrant.

The last forty years were in a real sense a challenge to Jewish survival — in the literal sense of the word. A number of factors contributed to this survival, not the least of which was the role played by the rescue organizations of the various Jewish communities throughout the world. In Canada, this role was assumed by the Canadian Jewish Congress and the Jewish Immigrant Aid Services (Jias). The aims and objectives of Jias, as stated in its Constitution, gave and continue to give concrete expression as to how rescue and survival have been implemented:

To facilitate the lawful entry of Jewish immigrants to Canada; to provide reception services to meet all boats and trains bringing immigrants, receive the immigrants upon arrival, help them to clear the necessary formalities in connection with their entry, provide them with comforts, assist in transportation arrangements and guide the new arrivals to their destination. To provide immigration consultation services to all interested regarding existing immigration regulations. To assist sponsors in following the necessary application procedure for the admission of immigrants.

To represent the immigrant and the sponsor before the authorities in all cases requiring such representation. To provide a programme of social service to assist the immigrants in finding suitable accommodation, employment or training in a gainful occupation, render assistance with respect to food, clothing, medical aid and such other aid as may be found necessary, and facilitate the general adjustment of the immigrant by helping him to become a self-reliant member of the Jewish community and a sound citizen of Canada.

To provide naturalization services and to encourage and assist newcomers in becoming citizens of Canada. To foster Canadian ideals among the newcomers and to instil in them a thorough knowledge of Canadian history and institutions; and a true patriotism and love for their adopted country. To provide the newcomers wherever necessary, with a citizenship school programme, teaching them the languages of the country, and offering such other individual and group facilities for their social integration as may be necessary.

To provide Legal Aid Services pertaining to immigration, naturalization, documentation, affidavits, etc. and other activities within the scope of the Organization. To provide a worldwide service for the location of relatives and friends. To provide facilities for sending relief parcels and remittances as may be indicated. To do all such acts or things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects or any of them.

Migration has been the weapon of Jewish survival for thousands of years. However, it has only been until comparatively recent times that an agency, whose sole focus is upon migrant aid, has been functioning. In Canada, this concept was represented by the Jias; in the United States, it has been the United Hias Service which has been shouldering this responsibility, and which, this year, also marks an anniversary — its 75th.

The role played by Hias was eloquently indicated by Brigadier General David Sarnoff, chairman of the board, Radio Corporation of America, in his acceptance of the Award of Honor for 1958 at the United Hias Service annual meeting in New York on February 15. General Sarnoff paid tribute to the achievements of this organization by stating that: "Neither I, nor any one of the more distinguished men who accepted this crown of laurel in preceding years, has done for the American Jewish community one-hundredth part as much as the generations of dedicated men and women whose love and labor have gone into making HIAS so enduring and so supremely useful."

The Canadian Jewish Review is one of only 32 Audit Bureau of Circulations magazines in Canada; and one of only four published weekly in English. It gives wide, city-to-city coverage for your advertising message, and reaches a select consumer audience. It is received every Friday in the mail, and is read by the family groups which gather together for the Sabbath observance on Friday nights. Every issue is a guide to planning and purchasing, in the able-to-buy homes, with high-ranking purchasing power as well as understanding and appreciation of quality and prestige in goods and services.

Upbuilding With Israel Bonds

The Israel Bond Organization hailed the Israeli port town of Elath on the tenth anniversary of its liberation. The anniversary is being observed by a five-day celebration in Elath, located at Israel's southernmost tip on the Gulf of Aqaba. More than 15,000 visitors are expected in Elath for the historic celebrations. At the time ten years ago when the area was liberated during Israel's War of Independence, there was nothing at this location but an army post. Today, Elath's population has passed the 5,000 level.

"Elath is Israel's gateway to the countries of Africa and Asia," Dr. Joseph J. Schwartz, vice-president of the Israel Bond Organization, stressed in commenting on the tenth anniversary observance. "Its development in the past ten years reflects the decisive role of Israel Bonds in every phase of its upbuilding."

Particularly in the past two years, since the Sinai campaign opened the Gulf of Aqaba to the shipping of all nations, Elath has grown rapidly, and is quickly becoming one of the most important communities in all of Israel. Its harbor, built with the aid of Israel Bond funds, can now handle some 100,000 tons of shippings per year, and will soon be expanded even more. Israel Bonds have helped to build homes, public buildings, and other structures essential to the growth of Elath.

Of great significance is the role of Israel Bonds in linking Elath to the rest of the country. Israel Bonds have built the eight-inch oil pipeline which takes oil from tankers berthed at Elath and transports it to Haifa, and will help finance the new sixteen-inch line on which work will soon start. A modern road from Beersheba to Elath, built in major part with Israel Bond funds, has been termed by Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion "our dry-land Suez Canal." A new railroad from Beersheba has been started, and will soon reach Elath.

A recent ceremony marked the completion of the 1,000th dwelling unit built in Elath with Israel Bond funds. The Israel Government building program, financed in great measure by Israel Bonds, has already provided twenty-five school classrooms, seventeen shops, four factories, a hospital clinic, two synagogues, and a ritual bath. "The town of Elath is Israel's most rapidly growing community," Dr. Schwartz said, "and one of the most swiftly growing places in the entire world. Purchasers of Israel Bonds can be proud of the part they are playing in the development of this historic port."

Every meal should contain proteins, vitamins, minerals, and calories, in the proportions recommended by nutritionists, who advise a wide variety of foods in order to gain all the nutrients required for good health.

In Springtime, when heavy winter footwear has been discarded, warm weather seems to cause tired and aching feet. A daily footbath, with alternate plunges into hot then cold water will help to remove the tiredness.
